THE CLARITY COMPASS

NICHE BUILDER

PREMIUM FRAMEWORK · STEP-BY-STEP TEMPLATE

Find your niche.

Help more people. Make more. Impact more. This is the exact framework we use inside ECA to help coaches uncover a niche they'll actually stick with.

Most coaches don't struggle to choose a niche because they lack ideas. They struggle because choosing one feels like losing every other option.

This workbook walks you through the Clarity Compass — a four-part framework that helps you find a niche rooted in what fills you up, what you're good at, what people actually need, and what they're willing to pay for.

HOW TO USE THIS WORKBOOK

1. Work through each P in order — Passion, Practice, Pain, Profit. Don't skip ahead. Each one builds on the last.
2. Answer honestly, not strategically. The right answers are the ones you actually believe, not the ones that sound impressive.
3. On the final pages you'll combine your answers into one clear niche statement that tells people exactly who you help.
4. Commit for 90 days. The framework only works if you actually stick to the niche long enough to test it.

Why Most Coaches Stay Stuck

Before we build your niche, let's diagnose what's actually keeping you stuck.

Choosing a niche is like opening Netflix. You know you want to watch something. You click through loads of options. You start one, come off it, change your mind again. Forty-five minutes later, you've watched nothing.

That's exactly what most coaches do with their niche. One week it's mindset. Next week it's business. Then confidence. Then relationships. Constantly changing direction without committing to anything.

Nobody really knows what they do. Their content feels all over the place. Their message keeps changing — and the audience ends up just as confused as they are. When they don't get clients, they blame the niche, but not their inability to stick with one long enough to make it work.

Most coaches already have the right niche somewhere within them.
They just don't know how to pull it out and turn it into something clear.

This workbook is how you pull it out. Four questions, four answers, one clear niche.

The Clarity Compass

Four ingredients. Miss one and something always feels off.

Most coaches choose a niche backwards — they pick what sounds good online. The Clarity Compass works the other way. It aligns four ingredients until your niche is so clear, nobody can really compete with you on it.

PASSION

What you genuinely care about helping people solve.

PRACTICE

What you've already solved for yourself or others.

PAIN

A problem people want gone NOW, not someday.

PROFIT

Something people are already paying real money to fix.

Passion — What You Love

Some coaches pick a niche because they think it'll make money. At first they're excited. Then a few months in, they hate talking about it. Their content feels forced, they get bored, and they start looking at other niches again. Passion is what keeps you showing up when the algorithm punishes you or a client cancels. You need to care about this problem deeply enough to keep going when it stops being shiny.

ASK YOURSELF

What problem do I genuinely care about helping people solve?

PROMPTS TO HELP YOU THINK IT THROUGH

- › What topics or activities make you lose track of time?

- › What kind of work brings you joy even on tough days?

- › What really fills you up — what would you do for free?

Passion — What You Love — Your Answer

EXAMPLE

When I'm helping a friend who's nervous about asking someone out, I lose track of time. I genuinely love this stuff. I find so much joy in watching someone go from scared to text 'hi' to confidently walking up to a stranger and starting a conversation. The transformation in their self-belief is what fires me up.

NOW WRITE YOURS

Pull together everything from the previous page into one honest answer.

Practice — What You're Good At

Caring isn't enough on its own. People paying you thousands want to know one thing: does this person actually understand me? They'll ask — have you been through it, have you solved it, or have you helped someone else through it? Practice is what makes your niche believable. It's the receipts behind your message.

ASK YOURSELF

What problems have I already solved in my own life or helped others with?

PROMPTS TO HELP YOU THINK IT THROUGH

- › What results have you consistently achieved for yourself or others?

- › What training, certifications, or real-life experience makes you uniquely qualified?

- › What compliments or feedback do you regularly get about your skills?

Practice — What You're Good At — Your Answer

EXAMPLE

I've helped four of my close friends completely change their dating life — from being stuck on apps with no replies to consistently going on dates with women they actually like. I've been through it myself: I was the awkward guy in my 20s who couldn't talk to women without freezing up. I rebuilt that from the ground up and now help others do the same.

NOW WRITE YOURS

Pull together everything from the previous page into one honest answer.

Pain — What The World Needs

This is where most coaches get stuck. They pick something they care about and something they're good at — but nobody buys. Why? Because they're talking about problems that sound nice on paper, not problems people desperately want fixed. People don't spend thousands on coaching because they want 'growth.' They buy because they're in pain. Your niche needs to solve a problem people want gone NOW — not someday.

ASK YOURSELF

What problem is making someone's life harder RIGHT NOW?

PROMPTS TO HELP YOU THINK IT THROUGH

- › What problems have you observed or experienced that you genuinely want to solve?

- › What do people often ask you for help with — that you can actually help with?

- › What struggles can you confidently solve with your skills?

Pain — What The World Needs — Your Answer

EXAMPLE

Single men are absolutely struggling right now. They're on the apps swiping for hours with no matches, getting ghosted, feeling invisible. The ones who do get dates choke up and get rejected. It's eating their confidence and they're convinced something is wrong with them. I know exactly how to fix this because I had the same problem.

NOW WRITE YOURS

Pull together everything from the previous page into one honest answer.

Profit — What You Can Earn From

This is the one most coaches skip — and it's why they go broke. Just because people struggle with something doesn't mean they'll pay to solve it. Some problems people complain about. Other problems they pay money to fix fast. You need to know the difference. If nobody is currently spending real money on solving this problem, you don't have a niche — you have a hobby.

ASK YOURSELF

Are people already spending real money to solve this problem?

PROMPTS TO HELP YOU THINK IT THROUGH

- › What problems do you solve that people would pay to have fixed?

- › Have you seen others make a real living solving similar problems?

- › What results or outcomes could you deliver that are worth paying for?

Profit — What You Can Earn From — Your Answer

EXAMPLE

Men are absolutely paying for dating coaching right now. Hayley Quinn, Matthew Hussey, dozens of others charge thousands for 1-to-1 dating help and they're booked solid. There's a huge market for this — guys will pay serious money to stop being lonely. The result I deliver (confidence to meet women and start relationships) is worth tens of thousands to them, easily.

NOW WRITE YOURS

Pull together everything from the previous page into one honest answer.

Bringing It All Together

You've answered each P individually. Now we collapse all four into one sentence. This is the master question — the one that forces the four ingredients to overlap.

What problem am I passionate about solving, that I have practice in addressing, which solves a real pain people experience and offers the potential for profit?

YOUR INITIAL NICHE STATEMENT

Crafting Your Niche Statement

Turn your raw answer into a sentence that does the selling for you.

A great niche statement makes three things crystal clear: WHO you help, the PROBLEM they have, and the RESULT you deliver. Start with this simple formula.

THE BASE FORMULA

I help [WHO] who [PROBLEM] become [RESULT].

WORKED EXAMPLE — A DATING COACH

- Passion: You care about helping men build better relationships.
Practice: You've helped friends improve their dating life before.
Pain: Single men struggle to get dates and keep being rejected.
Profit: Men already pay for dating coaching every day.

✗ TOO VAGUE

"I help people become more confident."

✓ MUCH CLEARER

"I help single men who struggle on dates become confident meeting women."

But we can take it ONE LEVEL FURTHER and make it even stronger. Turn the page →

The "So That They Can" Upgrade

This one tiny addition turns a good niche statement into one people actually buy from.

THE INSIGHT

Confidence isn't the real outcome.

The real outcome is what confidence helps them DO.

So we add a 'so that they can...' statement to the end. It names the deeper outcome — the thing your client actually cares about. That's what makes people reach for their wallet.

THE UPGRADED FORMULA

I help [WHO] who [PROBLEM] become [RESULT], so that they can [DEEPER OUTCOME].

THE DATING COACH — UPGRADED

"I help single men who struggle on dates become confident meeting women, so that they can get into a healthy relationship."

WHO ARE THEY?

Single men.

WHAT'S THE PROBLEM?

They struggle on dates.

WHAT'S THE RESULT?

They become confident meeting women.

WHAT'S THE DEEPER OUTCOME?

They get into a healthy relationship.

Fill In Your Niche Statement

Use the upgraded formula to write your own. Build it piece by piece.

Don't try to write the whole sentence at once. Answer each of the four parts separately first, then string them together.

I help [WHO] who [PROBLEM] become [RESULT],
so that they can [DEEPER OUTCOME].

WHO I HELP

Be specific. Not 'people' — name them.
e.g. single men in their 30s

THEIR PROBLEM

What are they struggling with RIGHT NOW?
e.g. they struggle on dates and keep being rejected

THE RESULT I DELIVER

What will change for them when we're done?
e.g. they become confident meeting women

THE DEEPER OUTCOME (so that they can...)

Why does the result actually matter? What does it unlock?
e.g. they get into a healthy relationship

YOUR NICHE

Your Final Niche Statement

One sentence. Clearer than yesterday. Ready to be tested.

You won't get this perfect on day one. Nobody does. But you need ONE sentence to commit to. Write the clearest version you can today — then go and test it.

MY NICHE STATEMENT

QUALITY CHECK

- ☐ Could a stranger tell exactly WHO I help from this sentence?
- ☐ Is the PROBLEM specific and painful — not vague like 'growth'?
- ☐ Does it name a clear RESULT, not just a feeling?
- ☐ Does it land on a DEEPER outcome people actually care about?
- ☐ Would I be proud to put this on my profile bio today?

Testing Your Niche

How to know if your niche actually works — without quitting after two weeks.

Here's the truth most coaches don't want to hear: your niche probably isn't the problem. Your inability to stick with it long enough to test it properly is the problem.

If people are already paying thousands to solve this problem, the niche works. Your only job now is to show up consistently enough for the right people to find you.

90 DAYS

MINIMUM

Commit to your niche for a minimum of three months. Anything less and you can't tell if it's the niche or the consistency.

5 / 7

DAYS A WEEK

Post content five days out of seven. Every piece should hit one of your audience's pain points or problems head on.

ONE

AVATAR

Speak to ONE person, not a category. Their job. Their pain. Their inner dialogue. Make them feel seen, not marketed to.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Don't change your niche for 90 days. Show up. Test it. Then decide.

YOU'VE DONE THE WORK.

Now see what's possible.
